There was a little incident just before the Sheridan sailed that caused quite a sensation among the crowd. A coal passer who was attempting to leave the ship was seized by two quartermasters and they attempted to put him aboard. He put up a stiff fight and managed to get about half way down the steep gangplank when two sentries came to the assistance of the ship's men and pulled him aboard after a stiff fight. Meanwhile the man's friends on the dock cheered him with shouts of, "Dive overboard," and other good advice. To prevent such action the captain ordered the man put in the brig. Finally he changed his mind and ordered him ashore together with some other men. The man and his friends left hurling threats at the
